I'm a published historian and biographer whose work has focused on the Pacific Northwest, 1845-1925. For fifteen years, I was the public historian at Seattle's Museum of History & Industry, which included responsibility for research, curation, and adult programs, and long-term development of our core exhibition on metro Seattle history, 1940 to the present. My own published historical research has concerned war in Washington Territory and State (1855-1945), local innovation, labor history, suburbanization and urban history, women's history, journalism history, and maritime history, including U.S. Navy. As MOHAI's historian, I've been responsible for researching a variety of small exhibitions, from popular culture to the centennial of the Boeing Company.
